THE SCOTTISH BURGH RECORDS SOCIETY.

THE value of the early Records of the Burghs of Scotland, as throwing light upon national life and manners, explaining national institutions, and illustrating social progress, has been fully recognised, and can scarcely be exaggerated. Some of the Book Clubs, which have contributed so much to the elucidation of Scottish History, have already directed their attention to these Records. The Spalding Club has given the country a peculiarly interesting and valuable series of extracts from the Records of the Burgh of Aberdeen, while the Maitland Club has published notices from the Records of Dysart, and extracts from the Burgh Records of Glasgow, Prestwick, Edinburgh, and Canongate. Apart, however, from what has been done in regard to Aberdeen, it cannot be said that much more has been effected than merely to break ground in the direction of investigating and publishing extracts from the Burgh Records of Scotland; and as nothing more is now to be hoped from the Book Clubs which still exist, this Society has been formed for the special purpose of undertaking the work.

Besides extracts from the Burgh Records, copies of the Charters of Burghs and illustrative Extracts from contemporary local Records will be given, as far as may be considered desirable.

The annual subscription is One Guinea, payable in advance, on the 1st day of January. The first subscription was payable on 1st January 1868. A payment of £5, 5s. will entitle any member to a copy of the six volumes which have been issued, and to the volume which is now ready to be sent out.

The Extracts from the Records of each Burgh will, as far as the Committee consider expedient, be issued separately, and without adhering to any prescribed order.

As affording a key to much that is to be found in the Records of the Burghs, and as generally illustrative of municipal institutions in Scotland, the Committee resolved to publish, in early volumes of the series, the Laws of Scotland relating to the Burghs, down to the accession of James VI. to the crown of England, and probably to the union of the two kingdoms. In pursuance of this design, they have already issued a volume containing the Laws of the Four Burghs, and the old Laws relating to the Burghs, from the earliest period of record till the return of James I. to Scotland in 1424. The editing of that work, and the preparation of the introductory historical sketch of the Burghs prefaced to it, were undertaken by Professor COSMO INNES, who has also undertaken the editing of the second volume, which is now passing through the press.

A volume of Extracts from the oldest Records of the City of Edinburgh, extending from 1403 till 1528, and including all that is now known to exist of the burghal legislation of the capital during that period, was delivered to the members during March 1870. A second volume, containing Extracts from these Records, and Selections from the Accounts of the Treasurers and Deans of Guild of the City, down to 1556–7, was issued in December 1871. A third volume, containing selections from the Records and Accounts of the City till after the Reformation, with a general index of matters in the three volumes, is in preparation.

The Corporation of Edinburgh having authorised the transcription and printing, for its own purposes, of its oldest Charters and other muniments, was pleased to allow the Scottish Burgh Records Society to print off copies for the use of the members of the Society. That volume, containing Charters from 1143 to 1540, was delivered to the members in January 1871. The preparation of a second volume has been authorised.

The editing of "Selections from the Burgh Records of Aberdeen" having been undertaken by JOHN STUART, Esq., LL.D., in continuation of the series prepared by him for the Spalding Club, a volume of Extracts from these Records, extending from 1625 till 1642, was delivered to the members in November 1871. A second and concluding volume, containing selections from the Burgh Records, from 1643 till 1747, was issued in May last.

A volume containing a selection of Charters relating to the Burgh of Peebles, with Extracts from the oldest Records of the Burgh, and a Preface and Historical Introduction by William Chambers, Esq., of Glenormiston, LL.D., author of the "History of Peeblesshire," is now ready for issue.

Selections from the Records of the Burghs of Haddington, Dunfermline, and Dysart, are being prepared.

Some progress has been made in preparing for publication a collection of the Charters of the City of Glasgow, and arrangements are in progress for proceeding with a similar collection of the Charters of the City of Perth. In the execution of this work, which is of great local as well as of national importance, the Committee hope to receive substantial assistance from the larger Burghs whose Charters may be from time to time published. Meanwhile the Committee will be glad to receive from Town Clerks and other custodiers of public documents, such information as they can give in regard to original documents in their possession, illustrative of the constitution and early history of the municipal institutions of the country, and to communicate with such Burghs as may be desirous to co-operate with the Committee in publishing selections from their earliest Records.

It is requested that all who are disposed to further the prosecution of this project, will be so good as to intimate their subscriptions as early as possible to the Secretary or Treasurer.

PREFACE

AND

INTRODUCTION.

PREFACE.

IN 1863, when preparing materials for the HISTORY OF PEEBLESSHIRE, I applied to Mr John Bathgate, then Town Clerk of Peebles, for liberty to examine the Charters of the Burgh, the Burgh Council Records, and such other papers of an old date as might prove serviceable. The required liberty was granted; but in consequence of alleged losses, the documents submitted for inspection were comparatively few in number. The only charter that could be produced, was that of James IV. (1506), wanting the seal. All the others were missing, inclusive of the great charter of James VI. (1621); the only thing that could be shown for which was a copy of an imperfect English translation, printed in the form of a small tract in 1825. As regards the Records of the Town Council, the oldest began on 4th October 1456, and broke off abruptly in 1483. There was then a blank until 1652, when the Records were resumed, and continued with breaks of several years at a time. The two older volumes resembled bunches of discoloured leaves, in a tattered condition; no care apparently having been taken for their proper preservation. I was consequently unable to present that continuous and vivid account of the Burgh transactions reflecting on social history which would have been so very desirable. There matters rested until the work of collecting and printing documents for the SCOTTISH BURGH RECORDS SOCIETY, led to renewed inquiries, in the present year, concerning the charters and records of Peebles.

The honour of discovering the missing documents, all of deep public interest, belongs to Mr J. D. MARWICK, Town-Clerk of Edinburgh, Secretary of the BURGH RECORDS SOCIETY, aided by his two assistants, Mr Alexander Harris, and Mr Robert Renwick. The following account of this notable discovery, furnished to me in a communication from Mr Renwick, during Mr Marwick's absence on the continent, will be read with interest:—

"The extracts from the earliest extant volume of the Records of the Town Council of Peebles, given by you in your "History of Peeblesshire," attracted Mr Marwick's attention, from the curious glimpses they afford of burghal life in the south of Scotland towards the close of the fifteenth century. He accordingly applied to Mr J. D. Bathgate, the present town clerk, for an inspection of the volume, which was at once sent to him, along with the volume of transcripts which had been made for you when preparing your volume, and which you had presented to the town. An examination of these, and especially of the original volume, satisfied him that the Peebles Records were worthy of early attention by the Burgh Records Society, and I was asked to make the requisite extracts with a view to publication.

"After these extracts had been made, it was considered desirable to print such of the oldest charters of the burgh as could be collected, but only a very few charters could be discovered in the ordinary repositories of the town.

"When the charters were being collected, Mr Marwick wished me to examine Macfarlane's MS. Collection, preserved in the library of the Faculty of Advocates, in the hope of finding some trace of the Charter of Erection of the Collegiate Church of St Andrew. Being unsuccessful in that quarter, Mr David Laing suggested that I might look with the same object into General Hutton's MS. Collection, made for his contemplated Monastic History of Scotland, and preserved in the same library. I did so, and was agreeably surprised to find two quarto volumes, prepared between the years 1800 and 1813, entirely devoted to transcripts of charters and extracts from the records of Peebles. Mr Marwick thereupon obtained permission from the curators of the library to make a careful inspection of these volumes, and he selected for transcription and publication in the present volume such charters as were connected more specially with the burgh. It was impossible however, to doubt that the General must have had access to many of the charters which had subsequently disappeared. The minute description which the volumes contained of many of these documents afforded conclusive evidence of this; and, as the writings were of great interest, and it was exceedingly desirable to have the proof-sheets collated with the originals, if they could possibly be discovered, Mr Marwick applied to Mr Bathgate, to permit a thorough search to be made for them in the town-house and other likely places. The permission was at once given, and it was arranged that Mr Harris and I should take advantage of our first holiday to make an investigation into every corner where there was any probability of coming upon the papers. Fortunately, our search was successful. Two presses in the Town Hall, at Peebles, were found to contain large collections of papers, ancient and modern, and amongst these we discovered a considerable number of volumes of records of several descriptions, and all, or nearly all the papers which General Hutton had made use of, as well as others which were not suitable for the purpose he had in view, and were consequently not transcribed by him.

"It is observable, from scraps of newspapers placed here and there as marks in some of the volumes of records, that they have passed through the hands of some person, within the last twenty years or thereabouts. It seems probable that the belief in their loss has arisen from the books not having latterly come under the observation of those qualified to decipher the writing; and, but for the conviction of their existence, founded on the knowledge derived from General Hutton's volumes, and the impulse derived from this publication, these valuable records would not at the present time have been brought to light.

"The whole charters have now been carefully examined, and such of them as have been considered suitable for the present purpose have been printed. In cases where there was merely a copy to print from, the proofs have been collated with the originals.

"The principal charter, that of James VI., 1621, is not recorded in the Register of the Great Seal. A complete and accurate copy is consequently of the greater importance. The original deed is written on the face of a large sheet of parchment, and in several places, particularly at the folds, the material has been entirely worn away. In others, owing to the action of time and apparently of damp, the writing had faded to such an extent as to be quite undecipherable. In these circumstances, Mr Marwick applied to the Town Council of Peebles for permission to endeavour to restore the faded writing by chemical process, so far as to enable it to be read, and this permission was at once accorded. The charter was thereupon placed in the hands of Mr Dickson, Curator of the Historical Department of the General Register House, by whom the faded writing was brought up sufficiently to enable him to complete the transcript. The restored portions now occupy several pages of print. The whole of the charter was thereafter carefully collated by Mr Dickson, who has also collated with the Great Seal Register such of the charters as are there recorded. The community of Peebles may, accordingly, now be said to possess for the first time, an accessible and authentic copy of their most valuable Burgh Charter; which has, moreover, suffered nothing from the process to which it has been subjected.

"As for the Burgh Records, the first preserved volume, beginning in 1456, ends in 1483. Towards the end of that book, statutes of the bailies and council, and notes of Burgh Court proceedings are of rare occurrence; the great majority of the entries consisting of resignations and sasines of burgh property and annuals. Three volumes, and the fragment of another, bring down this, the first series of extant Records, to 1567, with the exception of blanks between 1530-4 and 1541-5; but the character of the entries in the latter part of the first volume is kept up, and there is not much of general interest. Indeed, almost the only items which it was thought desirable to extract were those relating to the admission of burgesses, where the burgess money was directed to be applied for public works, such as steeple building, bridge-work, &c. This state of matters can only be explained by supposing that subsequent to the commencement of the first volume, the system had been introduced of recording the proceedings of the Burgh Court and the ordinances of the bailies and council in a separate volume. There is, however, little room for conjecture; for, in a volume of accounts commencing in 1623, are found portions of the Burgh Court Books, dated respectively 1509 and 1520, used as wrappers or covers for one of those accounts, viz., that of 1633-4.

"A volume written in Latin, and containing resignations and sasines, services of heirs, and instruments by notaries, commences in 1549, and ends in 1565. A few entries have been taken from this volume, which is largely composed of matter not relating to the Burgh, but to persons and places throughout the county and district.

"Between 1554 and 1573, there are two volumes containing the statutes and proceedings of the bailies and the council, and these registers have been largely drawn upon for extracts which will be found in the present volume. From the latter date till 1604, the only volume which exists is a Register of Sasines commencing in 1594.

"In 1604, the system of keeping the transactions of the provost, bailies, and council separate from those of the magistrates sitting in the Burgh Court, was in operation. From about this time, therefore, there are, in addition to the sasine registers, two sets of records, the Council Record and Burgh Court Book.

"The Council Records recently found, embrace the following periods:—1604-1616; 1620-52; and 1679-1714. The volumes for 1652-1679, and those subsequent to 1714, were known to, and have been largely used by, you in the preparation of your History of Peeblesshire. It is accordingly understood that, from 1604 to the present time, with the exception of the part applicable to the four years from 1616 to 1620, and a few leaves at the end of volume 1650-52, the Council Records are complete. The Burgh Court Books which have been found of a date subsequent to 1623, consist of three volumes, and extend from that time down to 1704 continuously.

"The Treasurer's accounts, containing a number of curious and interesting items, embrace the following periods:—1554, 1623-39, 1645-6, 1650-1, and 1652-65."

"The greater number of the volumes being provided with parchment covers are in a fair state of preservation, but others not similarly protected have suffered in consequence. Several leaves have been altogether lost, and others in a loose state are out of their places. Mr. Bathgate is anxious to get the whole of the Records bound in a style uniform with the first volume, and when this is done the volumes will, to a large extent, be secured against farther deterioration."

This explanatory statement by Mr Renwick leaves little to be said of a prefatory nature. The missing charters and records being largely recovered, an opportunity for giving them publicity has occurred in the volume now issued by the BURGH RECORDS SOCIETY. The originals having been returned to the proper quarter, are now fittingly preserved in a fire-proof depository.

The charters and general documents presented are not numerous; but, besides being locally valuable, they form a fair contribution to antiquarian and ecclesiastical literature. With respect to the extracts offered from the Burgh Records, beginning with 1456, they will be found to possess that degree of interest which it is the object of the Burgh Records Society to cultivate. To assist in promoting that object, I have drawn on some personal knowledge of the antiquities connected with Peebles, and thrown together the following observations and notes, in the form of an Introduction, Historical and Topographic, illustrated by a few wood engravings.

Mr Marwick is particularly desirous that acknowledgment may be made here of the valuable services generously rendered by Mr Thomas Dickson, Curator of the Historical Department in the General Register House, in the preparation of the present volume. The actual labour contributed by him in transcribing those portions of the charters of 1621 which he was enabled to decipher, and afterwards in collating that and other charters, was very great; but, in addition to these acts of kindness, he has always been ready to make his great knowledge and experience available in any difficulty. Thanks are also very specially due to Mr John Stuart, LL.D., and to Mr George B. Robertson, Deputy Keeper of the Records, for their willing and valuable counsel and active aid. Nor is it possible to exaggerate the value of the service rendered by Mr Renwick, to whose unremitting zeal and painstaking industry this volume mainly owes its existence.

INTRODUCTION:

HISTORICAL AND TOPOGRAPHIC.

PEEBLES, a Royal Burgh, twenty-two miles south from Edinburgh, occupies a pleasant situation in the upper part of the vale of Tweed. All around is a mountainous district; the lower kind of hills bearing on their rounded summits interesting memorials of the early history of the country. These memorials consist of circular entrenchments, varying in dimensions, erected for purposes of defence against invasion, and to all appearance the work of an early British people; though in some instances, as in the approaches from the east and north, they may have been raised as lately as the fifth or sixth century, to oppose the aggressions of Jutes and Angles. The modern inhabitants are ignorant of their origin, but commonly call them Danish camps. The term Danish is evidently a corruption of the old British word Dinas, signifying a hill-fort. The word Dinas has been otherwise corrupted. Some places take from it the name Tinnis or Tinnies; and a hill lying on the east of Peebles, plentifully covered with these ancient forts, is corruptedly called Janet's Brae. A tolerably complete account of the British hill-forts in Peeblesshire, is offered in the History of the County (1864).

Peebles traditionally dates from this early British period, when a tribe of the wandering Gadeni pitched their rude tents or shielings, designated by them Pebyll, on a broad alluvial plateau on the north bank of the Tweed. From this British term Pebyll, signifying tents, the town takes its present name, which has undergone several mutations. In old charters the place is called Peblis. There, on that level spot, did the town first assume a distinct shape, and there were the ecclesiastical glories of Peebles developed. From these circumstances, the cluster of houses in this quarter is locally spoken of as the Old Town.

Until it was extended by modern additions, the Old Town appeared to be only the fragment of what had at one time covered a much larger space of ground, in which the present roadways are presumed to mark the lines of ancient streets. Two or three leading facts present themselves. By David I., while still only Prince of Cumbria, the see of Glasgow was re-invigorated and re-endowed, 1116; and shortly after this, in the arrangement of the see into lesser ecclesiastical divisions, Peebles, with a group of parishes, became a deanery in the archdeaconry of Teviotdale, with a resident dean, the immediate superior of the ministering clergy within his jurisdiction. The next important fact was the founding of the parish church of Peebles, dedicated to St Andrew, on the site, as is believed, of a more ancient building. This event occurred in 1195, under the auspices of Bishop Joceline of Glasgow. This St Andrew's Church, as it was called, is frequently referred to in the charters and records connected with the burgh. A third fact of some importance was the founding and endowing of the Church of the Holy Cross, or Holy Rood, by Alexander III., 1261. As St Andrew's Church became a collegiate institution, with a provost, and twelve prebendaries serving at so many altars, and as the Church of the Holy Cross was constituted a monastery, with seventy red or Trinity friars, the number of ecclesiastics at these two establishments alone was very considerable. Both churches were placed in the Old Town, at the distance, in a straight line, of about a quarter of a mile from each other; the street between them forming a convenient ecclesiastical thoroughfare. A cross roadway, leading from an open quadrangular space in the old town, which had been the original market-place of the town, to the thoroughfare between the two churches, is now called the Lidgate, a corruption of Lych-gait, signifying the way by which the dead were carried to the churchyard of St Andrew, the access to which was on the east. By a small effort of the imagination, we are therefore to contemplate the Old Town as having covered several fields behind the present houses, and as being the residence of a numerous body of clergy, including the Abbot of Aberbrothock, when, with a retinue of monks (as indicated in the Grant, No. IV., page 6), he visited the Hospicium connected with his convent.

It will be seen that the charters and documents contained in the present volume commence at the time when the burgh became enriched with the ecclesiastical establishments just mentioned,—notably in the reigns of William the Lion and Alexander III. This last-named monarch, as is well known, was accidentally killed, 1285, whence ensued a succession of national disasters. For nearly a hundred years, therefore, burghal records are wanting. The town, as in the case of other burghs, passed under the sovereignty of Edward I., to whom, according to State Rolls, 'William de la Chaumbre, Bailif é Burgoiss de Pebles, Johan Vicaire del Eglise, é tote la communaute de Pebles,' signed articles of allegiance at Berwick-on-Tweed, 1296.

Hitherto, Peebles has been spoken of as being situated on the ground rising from the north bank of the Tweed, the relics of which constitute the Old Town. When the New Town, or the Peebles proper of modern times, was built, is not indicated by any record, and we are left to form an opinion on the subject from general but very conclusive circumstances. The open ground, dignified by the Church of St Andrew and the Church of the Holy Cross, was wholly indefensible. The houses were liable to attack, and could be easily destroyed by an enemy from the English border. Hence arose a necessity for building the town on the adjoining peninsula, formed by the Tweed on the south, and the Peebles water, as it is called in the older records, on the north; the infall of this small tributary being at the western extremity of the peninsula. This was an eminently defensible position, and its adoption seems to have been promoted by the building of a royal castle on the prominent knoll by which the peninsula is terminated on the west. We hear of this castle in the reign of Edward I. It seems more than probable that the new town assumed a determinate shape in the course of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. It was built in a manner befitting a seat of population exposed to predatory encroachment. To this point we have to draw particular attention.

In the Old Town there is not a vestige of any castellated or defensible edifice. The whole, even in the best days of the place, had consisted of a plain class of dwellings, thatched, and liable to instant destruction. There is no appearance of an environing wall. The two churches might at any time have been assailed, and their respective communities dispersed or put under contribution. The very existence of a town, so open to invasion, in the vale of Tweed, is a significant token of international peacefulness previous to the thirteenth century.

The new town was commenced and continued for several centuries on an entirely different footing. It became a species of border garrison,—an outpost, so to speak, of Edinburgh. The site of the new town is nothing more than a mass of diluvial gravel, the relic of some early geological movement. The surface of the peninsular mass is a height of about sixty feet from the Tweed on the one side, and the Peebles or Eddleston water on the other, affording space for a good broad street, lying east and west, with diverging closes or lanes on each side. The street is generally called the "Hie Gait" in the records, and the two lines of houses in the street are ordinarily spoken of as the North and South Raw. Such was the main thoroughfare, or High Street, on which markets and fairs were held. Here, towards the eastern extremity of the street, stood the market cross, which was a plain, octangular structure, with a central shaft, as renovated in 1699. From this structure, of which we give a representation as it appeared immediately before its removal (1807), royal proclamations were made. It was likewise the scene of burghal and other ceremonies requiring publicity. The cross was also used as a pillory for criminals. Here, James Tweedie of Drummelzier and his accomplices appeared in their shirts, to make confession of, and crave forgiveness for, the barbarous murder of John, Lord Fleming, 1524.[1] Nearly opposite the cross, on the north, was the entrance to the town from the Northgait.

CROSS OF PEEBLES, AS RENOVATED 1699.

The corner tenement on the left, in entering the Northgait from the Cross, was known as the cunzie or cunie neuk,—the term employed being from the old word coign, a corner. The present building is modern, having replaced that which is referred to in the Records, 12th February 1473, wherein it is stated that "Wylyam of Peblis" resigned his foreland lying "on the conzhe nest the Northgat," as an endowment for Saint Leonard's Hospital at the west end of the burgh, to insure prayers in all time coming, "for his saull, his wyffis saull, his barnis and princepally for all the saullis at the sayd Wylyam has had ony gudis wrangwysly of ony mannis, be bying or selling, or ony enterchangyng, and for all cristyn saullis." We seldom meet with so amusing a trait of late repentant candour.

The High Street, as was customary in old Scottish towns, was much embarassed by projections, outside stairs, and even with dunghills, notwithstanding edicts to the contrary. The projections were generally of a slight fabric, several being only of wood. They were mostly used as shops. An enquiry into the authority by which these "sindry choppis and new biggynnis" were erected, was ordered, 27th October 1560 (p. 262). Perhaps the most inconvenient object in the main thoroughfare was an open drain or gutter, called the Dean's Gutter, from being opposite the house occupied by the Dean of Peebles. It was ordained, that fleshers should bring their flesh for sale to that part of the street lying "betuix the croce and the Dene gutter" (p. 215). The mention of outside stairs, or "fore stairs," as they were generally called, renders it proper to explain the nature of the old street architecture in Peebles, and the means taken for defence of the burgh.

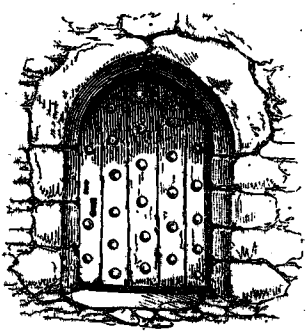
Around the town there were continuous stone dykes, with four principal entrances or ports, and ultimately, as will be afterwards noticed, the dykes were superseded by a very sufficient wall. With its castle, the burgh had, therefore, a considerably defensive aspect. But the inhabitants did not altogether rely on these means of security. The dwellings on both sides of the High Street, and also some dwellings in the closes, were strongly built as bastel-houses. The name bastel-house was applied to a dwelling constructed with its ground floor as an arched vault, the apartments above being reached by an outside stair. In cases of expected attack, the burgesses placed their wives and children, with such moveable wealth as they prized, in these vaults, which were secured by a small and very strong arched door. One of these doorways, in an existing bastel-house in Peebles, is represented in the adjoining cut. The thatched roof of these bastel-houses was easily set on fire, but it was not difficult to restore; and, at the end of a well-contested attack the town probably had not suffered much material damage.



DOOR OF A BASTEL-HOUSE IN PEEBLES.

In all the Scottish towns near the border there were bastel-houses of this kind, and even now, after ages of tranquillity, they have not disappeared. Scott, in his "Border Antiquities," vol. i. p. lxiv., makes the following reference to them:—"Lesudden, a populous village, when burned by Sir Ralph Evers, in 1544, contained no less than sixteen strong bastel-houses; and Jedburgh, when taken and burned by the Earl of Surrey, contained six of these strongholds, with many good houses besides, was twice as large as the town of Berwick, and could have accommodated a garrison of a thousand cavalry. The defence of these towns was very obstinate, the people themselves pulling down the thatch of their houses, and burning it in the streets to stop the progress of their enemies." As lately as the beginning of the present century, there survived from fifteen to twenty bastel-houses in Peebles. In the progress of street improvement a number have latterly been removed, but as many as six still existed in 1870. Between the bastel-houses in towns, and the feudal peel-houses erected along the line of the Tweed, there was a marked resemblance. The object of both was the same.

Edward I. is known to have visited Peebles, and to have granted charters dated from its royal castle. In 1304, he assigned Peebles, with its mill and other pertinents, to Aymer de Valence, his Warden of Scotland. Robert Bruce, under his designation of Robert I., is known to have granted a charter to the burgh of Peebles, including freedom to hold a fair; but the document is among the missing State Records.[1] In the year in which Bruce died, 1329, Peebles was visited by his son, Prince David,[2] then a boy of six years of age, who ascended the throne as David II., and during the early years of whose minority the government was conducted by Randolph, Earl of Moray. Now ensues a fresh dislocation of political ties. By the battle of Halidon Hill, 1333, Edward Baliol acquired a temporary and imperfect possession of the kingdom, and thereafter surrendered to Edward III., 1334, a large portion of the south of Scotland, including the county of Peebles.[3] The north-western boundary of the ceded territory was at Karlynlippis, or Carlops, near the northern base of the Pentland range of hills.[4] In virtue of this transfer, Peebles was a town under English jurisdiction for fully twenty years, a circumstance not contributing to the safety of any ancient records which it happened to possess.

The return of David II. from France, where he had been educated, imparted a gleam of hope to Scotland, but his disastrous defeat at the battle of Durham, 1346, when he was taken prisoner and carried to London, threw the country back to its former deplorable condition. Negotiations for peace, and the ransom and delivery of David, having taken place in 1356, a parliament met next year to ratify the stipulations. To this important assemblage of the Scottish Estates Peebles deputed two commissioners—

[4] Wynton's Chronicle.

"Nicholas, the son of John, and John, the son of William,"—such, perhaps, being the first time representatives were ever sent from Peebles. The same persons, as representing Peebles, also concurred with the representatives of fifteen other burghs in the appointment of procurators to concur in any treaty, and to undertake whatever obligation might be necessary, to effect the ransom and release of the king.

By the arrangements on this occasion, the English claims on Scotland were finally extinguished. The border line now shifts back to the former boundary, and Peebles resumes its status as a free Scottish burgh. After this event, the first communication made to Peebles by David II. consisted of letters to the bailies, burgesses, and community, 8th March 1362-3 (No. V. p. 8), charging them to assign a fitting place or stance for building "a certain chapel in honour of the glorious Virgin Mary the mother of God." This request was complied with. The spot assigned for the chapel was in the High Street, near the castle of Peebles; and for its support David, by a charter, granted the mill of Innerleithen. This charter is in existence, but it has not been deemed necessary to print it.

The country at large suffered the calamity of civil wars and disturbances, during the regency of the two dukes of Albany, father and son, at the conclusion of the fourteenth and beginning of the fifteenth century. The precarious condition of the burgh during this dismal period is evident from a passage in one of the old rhyming chronicles. About 1406, Sir Robert Umphraville, vice-admiral of England, made an incursion into Scotland, and attacking the town of Peebles on a market-day, made great spoil of the wares there collected, causing his men to measure out the cloth with their bows and spears. The affair is mentioned in Hardyng's Chronicle (1543), and it is stated that Umphraville hence acquired the name of Robin Mendmarket:—

"At Peebles . . . .
He brent the town upon their market-day,
And mete their cloth with spears and bows sere,
By his bidding without any nay;
Wherefore, the Scots from henceforward ay
Called him Robin Mendmarket in certain,
For his measures were so large and plain."

In consequence of the loss of its more ancient charters, however incurred, the burgh can point to no existing document of this kind earlier than one granted by James II. at the middle of the fifteenth century. Celebrity has been given to the town by the interesting poem, entitled Peebles to the Play, commonly, but without any absolute warrant, ascribed to James I., and believed to have been written about 1430. If that accomplished and unfortunate monarch, who was murdered at Perth in 1437, conferred any special token of his royal favour, the fact is not recorded. The charter given by his son and successor, James II., purports to be to the burgesses and community of Peebles, and is dated 5th February 1451-52 (No. IX. p. 16). It proceeds on the grounds "that in times long past by the hazards of war, and by fire, the charters, evidents, and several deeds of infeftment, granted to their predecessors and them, had been destroyed, burned, and annulled."

Among the charters will be observed (No. VIII. p. 14) an indenture entered into between the bailies and burgesses and Sir William Adesoun, a priest of Peebles, ordaining an obit of masses to be done at Saint Michael's altar, and our Lady's altar. This document is dated 3d September 1450. Of the original, which is in English, a facsimile is given at the beginning of the present volume. According to the indenture, nine masses were to be done annually, on behalf of certain persons specified, on the 3d of June, but if that day fell on a Saturday, Sunday, or any solemn holy day, the masses were to be delayed to the following Monday. The whole arrangement regarding these masses throws an interesting light on ecclesiastical history.

With respect to Saint Michael, mention is often made in the records of the service to be rendered at the altar of that puissant and greatly venerated archangel. Various pieces of land about the town were appropriated to the support of his chaplain. From the Burgh Records, 10th May 1462 (p. 142), we learn that the altar was provided with an image of Saint Michael, which was made to take part in the ceremony of infefting persons in the lands set apart in his honour. A bailie, with witnesses, having attended for the purpose of giving possession of certain lands from which an annual was payable "to the huphald of Sanct Mechelis seruis in Sanct Androis Kyrk,"

"thair was brocht the ymage of Sanct Mechel, and of that land was layd erd and stan in that ymagis hand,"—a singularly grotesque but no doubt effective ceremonial in the taking and giving possession of lands.

It is observed from an entry in the records, 14th June 1462 (p. 145), that the chaplain at Saint Michael's altar was installed in his office by the symbol of giving him a glove, and that at demitting office a glove was resigned into the hand of a bailie. The chaplain referred to in this particular record is "Schyr John of Loche." In all other instances of ministering priests being referred to, the same term "Schyr" or "Sir" is prefixed to their names; as, for example, "Sir Wilyam Gybsoun, "Sir John Smayle" (p. 146). This title of Sir, given to ecclesiastics in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, has, as everybody is aware, been superseded by the term Reverend. In quitting Saint Michael, we have to remark that a lane leading from the "North Raw" to Peebles Water was called Saint Michael's Wynd, a name which it still retains, and which was probably derived from the fact of certain lands belonging to the service of St Michael's altar being situated in its vicinity (pp. 142, 189).

By an entry in the records (p. 204), we learn that the Church of St Andrew was provided with an image of that saint, before which wax candles were kept burning. A piece of land is stated to have been held on paying annually "vj s. and viij d. for the vphalding of the wex candellis in the pane befor Sanct Andro in the queir." This establishes the fact that the image had a position in the choir, or place of peculiar honour. In the records, the existing roadway up the Old Town is called the "gat passand fra Pebles brig passes to Sant Andros Kirk" (p. 187).

To resume our history of the royal charters. Passing over several documents of lesser moment, we come to the charter of confirmation and novodamus by James IV., under his great seal, to the burgesses and community, of their privileges and possessions, dated 24th July 1506 (No. XX. p. 35). It is a more lengthened document than the charter of James II., and makes a similar allusion to the old charters and evidents having been burned, destroyed and annihilated.

During the minority of Queen Mary, under the protectorate of James, Earl of Arran, a royal charter was granted, 8th June 1543 (No. XXXII. p. 61), confirming a charter by the burgh, and John Lord Hay of Yester, constituting the parish church of St Andrew a collegiate church, with a provost, twelve prebendaries, and two young persons to assist in chanting divine service. The document specifies the titles and services of the respective prebendaries. They are to be called as follows:—The first, the prebendary of the blessed Virgin Mary of Childbirth; the second, the prebendary of the Holy Rood; the third, the prebendary of St Michael the archangel; the fourth, the prebendary of Saint Mary Major; the fifth, the prebendary of the blessed Peter and Paul; the sixth, the prebendary of Saint John the Baptist; the seventh, the prebendary of Saint Mary of Geddes Aisle; the eighth, the prebendary of Saint Andrew; the ninth, the prebendary of Saint James; the tenth, the prebendary of Saint Lawrence; the eleventh, the prebendary of St Martin; the twelfth, the prebendary of St Christopher. The whole, for their services at their respective altars, were to be maintained by rents from certain lands. The original charter by the Burgh and Lord Yester has not been discovered, but there is preserved an extract from it containing the rental of St Mary, and that extract will be found in the Appendix to the present volume.

It is to be noticed that this endowment of "altarages" in St Andrew's Church took place in 1543, only four years previous to the battle of Pinkiecleugh, fought 10th September 1547, when the English, under the Protector Somerset, totally defeated the Scots. This unfortunate contest turned mainly on the question of the Reformation, as carried out by Henry VIII., against the still intact Church of Rome in Scotland. Strange to say, the community of Peebles, which had just signalised itself by endowing prebends in St Andrew's Church, took the side of the English: the circumstance, however, most likely arose more from the terror inspired by invading hosts all over the southern counties than from any love for the religion of the reformers. The fact that the people of Peebles attached themselves to the English at this national crisis, is curiously brought out in the document entitled "Composition for Remission to the Bailies, Councillors, and Community of Peebles, for their treasonable adherence to the English," 15th June 1551 (No. XXXIII. p. 65). The community is stated to have treasonably adhered to "the old enemies of England," after the battle of Pinkiecleugh, "for a period of fifteen weeks or thereabouts in time of war." The composition or fine for this grave offence is seen to have been £200,—of course in Scots money, being about £16 13s. 4d. sterling. The Burgh Records, not being complete at this period, contain no notice of the Pinkiecleugh affair, nor of the fine imposed on account of it. We only learn incidentally that the town was visited by a military force who burnt St Andrew's Church. Very meagre notices of the event occur in 1555 (p. 215), 1556 (p. 236), and also under the date 11th December 1560 (p. 266), in a representation to the Lords of the Secret Council, that "the paroche kirk was brint and distroyit be Yngland xii yeris syne or thairby." The invaders committed a still greater atrocity. They cruelly burnt the town. Birrel in his Diary briefly refers to the event as follows: "Peebles burnt by Englishmen, in anno 1549." The invaders on the occasion possibly consisted of a detachment from the forces of Lord Wharton on the western marches, joined by the Earl of Lennox, who commanded the Scottish borderers in the service of England.[1]

The escapade connected with Pinkiecleugh, in which the people of Peebles were not singular, does not seem to have been remembered vengefully against the burgh. All things went on as usual, and again there was some experience of royal favour. Queen Mary, by a charter under the great seal, of new erected the burgh of Peebles into a free royal burgh, with liberty to hold markets and fairs, and with other privileges specified in ancient infeftments. It is dated Peebles, 17th December 1554 (No. XXXIV. p. 66). As seen by an extract from the Burgh Records (p. 209), "an honest and discreet man, Mungo Williamson," empowered by letters from the Queen, went, on the 3d May, 1555, to the market-cross of the burgh, and there solemnly proclaimed two new fair days, for the buying and selling of all kinds of merchandise.

From numerous entries in the records, it is observed that at this period the community were in an exceedingly perturbed condition, and the misery that prevailed among the humbler classes is very clearly indicated by the frequent notice of "pykaris," or stealers of petty articles, such as hens, kale, peats, &c. (pp. 221-4). In 1555 watchmen were appointed to keep watch during the night, and from that time till 1573, the records applicable to which period have been well preserved, numerous regulations regarding the watch were passed. The principal orders of this kind will be found in the extracts, one of which, passed in 1557, provided that at any sudden fray or incursion by thieves, a gun was to be fired, and the inhabitants were to assemble well armed (p. 240). What a condition of insecurity!

The distractions were aggravated by the uprooting of old usages consequent on the Reformation, and the turning adrift of large numbers of ecclesiastics and their attendants. The Reformation in Scotland was effected by statute, August 1560. Of this momentous event the records say very little, but that little is not valueless. In the first place, it is stated under date 30th March 1560 (p. 259), that "a venerable and worthy man, Friar Gilbert Broune, minister of the Holy Cross of Peebles," had been put in such mortal fear by John Master of Maxwell and others, on behalf of the Lords of the Congregation, that to save his life and prevent the destruction of his place and monastery he changed his dress, substituting a grey keltour gown for his white habit, at the same time putting on a "how" black bonnet. This act was no doubt intended to indicate that the Friar had renounced the old religion and embraced the new, but in the instrument in which he records his compromise he is careful to state that it was "not from any hatred of his old religion." No outrage on the structure or furnishings of the Cross Church is recorded, but we can entertain little doubt that by the invasion of the Master of Maxwell the edifice was cleared of all the objects hitherto considered sacred, including the reliques of Saint Nicholas and the "Haly Rude of Peebles," which for ages had been devoutly flocked to by pilgrims from all parts of Scotland.

We have a glimpse of the expulsion of the brotherhood of the Holy Cross. Gilbert Broune, the superior of the convent, casts up again in the records on the 27th January 1560, which according to the old mode of reckoning came after the 30th March of the same year. On this occasion he obeys the Lords of the Congregation, by delivering up the Cross Church to the bailies, and commanding his brethren to disperse. He takes care, however, to protest that he and other members of the convent rendered obedience on the understanding that they were severally to enjoy the endowments of the church during their lives. To this they were reasonably entitled, but their demission of office on an attempt to secure these terms has an unpleasantly sordid aspect.

What about St Andrew's Church during this commotion? Nothing very satisfactory can be said on the subject. It has been already mentioned, on the faith of the records, that this ancient parish church was burnt and destroyed by forces in the service of England about twelve years before the Reformation, and it is distinctly stated that it would require to be rebuilt; wherefore the burgesses besought the Lords of the Secret Council to let them have the newly cleared Cross Church to be the church for the parish. That at least a considerable portion of St Andrew's Church had been destroyed, is evident from the fact that on the 27th May 1555 (p. 213), Charles Geddes desires the bailies to "repair and big the Geddes ile," and from the still more conclusive fact that on the 14th October, same year (p. 218), "the inquest ordanis the baillies and nychtbouris pas to the Kirk and sycht the samyn with witty men to se quhow it may be biggit." It is not stated that the edifice was rebuilt. Yet there was probably some kind of restoration, for on the 13th January 1557 (p. 242), the bailies insist that the prebendaries shall make continual and daily service at their respective altars, conformable to endowment by the patrons. A similar entry occurs two years previously (p. 226), warning "all chaplains to mak residence at thair altaris conform to thair fundatioun within xlj dayis," under penalty of having their offices declared vacant. This would seem to indicate a laxity of the ecclesiastical system on the eve of the Reformation in Scotland.

The Reformation being effected, and the old endowments appropriated by the nobility and gentry—the yearly value derived from some of the prebends, however, being still under the administration of the burgh (p. 335)—the ecclesiastical system in Peebles was put on a very modest footing; for a time it consisted of only a single exhorter, named John Dikeson, whose annual stipend amounted to no more than forty merks."[1] St Andrew's Church was allowed to fall to ruin. For upwards of a century the structure has consisted of only a massive square tower, and a few broken walls—the grassy sward of its interior being dotted over with modern grave-stones. The chapel of the Virgin Mary in the High Street, becoming burgh property, was used occasionally for religious purposes until its removal in 1780. The Cross Church was used as the parish church until 1784, when the congregation removed to a new church of a poor style of architecture, erected on the site of the Castle of Peebles. At the spot in the eastern gable of the Cross Church where stood the high altar, a doorway was opened, and over it is the inscription—"FEIRE GOD, 1656." The church had five windows on the southern side, in which was the main entrance. Between the third window and the door there was a small aperture and arch, so constructed as to make it probable to the antiquaries of last century that the reliques of St Nicholas and the Holy Cross had been deposited there, so that they might be seen as well without as within the church.[2]

The cloisters and other buildings occupied by the monastics of the Cross Church were situated on the north side of the edifice. They had formed a quadrangle. The chief building, erected over a vault, consisted of a single apartment, which was reached by an outside flight of steps. On one side there was an opening from the apartment into the church. Probably this had been the apartment used by the superior, who could at any time, by means of the opening, observe the proceedings of the monks and other worshippers. The various outbuildings remained entire after the Reformation, some portions of them being used for a school till some time in the eighteenth century. They then sunk to ruin, and gradually disappeared; but, within the remembrance of the present writer, the foundations of the cloisters were still visible. The church itself, after its desertion in 1784, also became a ruin; the progress of its delapidation being accelerated by want of care and the improper abstraction of materials. The principal portion now remaining is the shattered ivy-clad tower.

Continuing our notes on the charters and records, we come to that sorely troubled state of affairs which immediately succeeded the Reformation. In the year 1569, during the regency of the Earl of Murray, the Borders, including the Vale of Tweed, were so greatly disturbed by parties of armed marauders that the community of Peebles found it necessary to increase their means of defence. The stone dykes which environed the town being insufficient for protection, it was resolved to build a regularly defensible wall. On this point the records of the burgh are gratifyingly explicit. Beginning with the 24th February 1569 (p. 312), we have a series of entries regarding the wall, from which, along with existing relics, we can trace the line of defence and the nature of its construction. Referring to the notices, which are worthy of careful perusal, it is enough to say that the wall was to be four ells and a half in height, "ground and all," and three feet and a half in breadth, with block houses, or projecting towers with shot holes at certain places. The wall was to begin at the "Golt Fut," a point on Tweed Green near the foot of the present Vennel, thence going northwards to Lord Borthwick's walls, where it was to turn westwards to Usher's wynd and Peebles Water; it was then to run along the foot of the gardens to "Peebles Brig," after which, going southwards at the West Port, it was to run along the south side of the town "to the said Golt Fut." The town was thus to be effectually enclosed, with the four ports which had hitherto existed in the environing dykes.

It is interesting to note the terms on which the wall was to be constructed. The authorities possessed no funds adequate for a work of such magnitude. All they could do was to offer a contractor the profits of the two corn mills and the wauk mill for ten years to undertake the job, with the provision that all the horses in the town should fetch lime to carry on the works. Stene Robesone gave some promise of constructing the wall on the proposed terms, but he (p. 315), shrunk from the bargain, and ultimately (p. 317), "Sir John Allane, commoun clerk, and Thomas Lauder, masone, agreed to build the wall on condition of having the profits of the mills for thirteen years. According to the definition respecting the run of the wall (p. 316), it was to go "north about inwith my lord Borthik wallis to Peblis Walter." The meaning of this seems to be that the wall was to keep within some property of Lord Borthwick in turning westwards. We see from present appearances that Borthwick's walls inclosed a quadrangular space exterior to the town wall, but intimately connected with it. The space so enclosed is now the property of the British Linen Company; and the name Borthwick's walls, which is given in Armstrong's map of Peebles, 1775, was until lately still in use. In the existing portion of the town wall in this quarter are comprehended the remains of a blockhouse mantled with ivy, situated at the north-eastern corner, adjoining Borthwick's walls. A representation of it is given in the annexed cut.

REMAINS OF TOWN WALL EAST PORT.

For a small country town with slender means, the surrounding wall was well executed, as regards height, breadth, and material, which consisted of stone and lime, with a coping of turf. We refer to the records for the precautions adopted by the burgh authorities for guarding the ports and defending the walls against sudden surprise,—the whole conveying to us a distressing picture of the condition of a Scottish border community early in the reign of James VI. We have attempted to sketch a map of the town with the wall of 1569, drawn from a close examination of existing relics, assisted by the entries in the burgh records and personal reminiscences of the locality. The adjoining sketch may be useful in contrasting the defensible character of the New with the open condition of the Old town. After the Reformation, however, when the two ecclesiastical establishments had been sacked, there was little in the Old Town to be worth caring for, and this division of the burgh sunk to the character of a semi-deserted suburb.

Unhappily, while the whole district of country from the Merse to Dumfriesshire was a scene of disorder, the general dissensions were imitated on a minor but not less rancorous scale by the burgesses of Peebles, who among themselves scolded, quarrelled, and fought, used towards each other opprobrious epithets in open council, constantly disagreed about rights to common property, and at times, out of malice or an inclination for plunder, committed crimes which brought them within the scrutiny of the higher courts.

No name occurs more frequently in the records during the fifteenth and sixteenth century than that of Dickison or Dykisoun. The Dickisons were proprietors of Winkston, a property situated about a mile north from the town, and bounded by certain commons pertaining to the burgh. Concerning the marches, there appear to have been disputes between William Dickison and John his son and heir, and the burgh in 1555 (p. 213). Although trusted, and raised to the position of a bailie, John Dickison was evidently a troublesome individual. From what cause, whether from a revival of the dispute about the marches, or otherwise, a bad feeling grew up in the town against him, and he was at length barbarously murdered on the 1st July 1572. Of this lamentable event, the records take no notice, except in a casual way. On the day following the murder, William Dickison of Winkston, for himself and his kinsmen, promises to live peaceably in time to come, and the bailies and community in like manner undertake not to molest him and his friends. But though only incidentally referred to here and elsewhere in the records the fact of the slaughter is undoubted; for it was the subject of judicial inquiry. On the 19th July the same year, James Tweedie, John Wychtman, Martin Hay, and John Bullo, all of Peebles, and Thomas Johnston, son of Thomas Johnston of Craigieburn, were tried at the High Court of Justiciary, 'for the cruel slaughter of the late John Dickisone of Wynkstone.' The assize acquitted them, with only one dissentient.[1] According to a tradition which lingered in the town till within the last fifty years, the murder was committed in the High Street, near the Dean's Gutter.

[1] Pitcairn's Criminal Trials, vol. i., p. 34.

The perplexing thing about this unhappy affair is, that the murdered man is spoken of traditionally as 'Provost Dickison,' and he is also, as will be seen, referred to as 'provost' in an entry in the council records, 1st March 1682. Now, it is proper to say, that at the time of the murder the provost of the burgh was 'William Lord Hay of Yester,' who was elected for a year, 16th October 1571 (p. 329). We, indeed, do not find any entry as to Dickison ever being appointed provost. The only explanation we can offer is, that Dickison had perhaps acted for some time as chief magistrate, or depute provost, for Lord Hay of Yester was frequently absent, and was in fact little better than an ornamental official.

From entries in the Privy Council Records, quoted in the History of Peeblesshire, the feuds, slaughters, and disorders in the county during the latter part of the sixteenth century fill the modern reader with astonishment. At this period, James VI. several times visited Peebles either to hold summary courts on disturbers of the peace, or in the more vain attempt to compose the feuds of the gentry. In the history of the town, are seen on a limited scale, the efforts of the monarchy to secure the allegiance of the burghs as a make-weight against the ambitious and dangerous tendencies of the higher class of nobles. All the charters granted to Peebles, as to other burghs, by the old Scottish sovereigns are traceable to this sagacious policy. James VI., after he had ascended the throne of England, gave a charter to the burgh, which remains the golden charter of the community, and is that commonly quoted.

This great charter, which amplifies all the privileges formerly conceded, is a charter of confirmation and novodamus. It was granted by James VI. to the Provost, Bailies, and Councillors of the Burgh of Peebles, 19th November 1621 (No. XL., p. 76). This copious document may be consulted for an account of the many privileges and possessions conferred from time to time on the burgh. From the explanations already offered, it is evident that great pains have been taken to give a perfect transcript and translation of this important document. As no such trouble had been incurred in effecting a transcript of the charter hitherto in use, the burgh now for the first time after a long period, is put in possession of a complete and trustworthy copy. The privileges conferred by the charter remain, modified by modern legislation; where the many possessions are, it would be painful to consider. In this respect, Peebles has not been exempted from the fate of most royal burghs favoured by the munificence of royal and other donors.

The records and accounts afford some curious information regarding the troops of the Commonwealth which were quartered in the town; and at a subsequent period we also find a few incidents connected with the troubles which sprang up in Scotland, consequent on the obligation to take the 'test.' Of this test, which drove the Covenanters to the hills, we observe that on one occasion certain magistrates and councillors refused to take it. But afterwards the members of council became more pliable. Under date 29th September 1684 occurs the passage,—'The proveists, baillies, thesaurer, and dean of gild, being newly elected, took upon their knees the Test.' As is seen from the list of council at this date, two "extraordinary members" had been imposed on it, "John earle of Tueiddale and John Lord Hay of Yester." By an arbitrary stretch of authority, as appears under date 27th December 1686, the election of the magistrates and council was suspended by royal mandate, such being a small specimen of the ill-considered acts which two years later drove the king from the throne, and led to the Revolution.

What became of the old castle of Peebles, once the residence of royalty, and a prime stronghold in this part of the country, is left unexplained by any record which we have been able to consult. The last time we see it mentioned is in the Rental Book of the Earl of Tweeddale's estates, which is dated Peebles Castle, 26th April 1671 till 1685. Peebles Castle therefore existed, though in a decayed condition, until nearly the close of the seventeenth century, and shortly afterwards sinking to ruin, it would probably be removed as building materials. Certainly, it was gone at the commencement of the eighteenth century. In 1720, the town council ordered the banks round the castle-hill to be planted with trees. Subsequently, a portion of the cleared site of the castle was laid out as a public bowling-green, and afterwards, the remaining part of the site was required for the new parish church. As regards the town wall of 1569, it existed, though in a dilapidated condition, until the middle of the eighteenth century. In 1758 the council resolved to take down the West Port, and level the port brae, in order to make a more commodious entry to the town. Cleared away by this and other operations, the wall generally disappeared about the year 1800, leaving only a few fragments, the largest of which, near the East Port, has already been referred to.

We conclude by calling attention to a few points of general interest in the earlier extracts. In these, some curious notices occur respecting a branch of civic administration, in regard to which we have no very definite information. We refer to the dousan or council of the burgh, which seems to have varied in its numbers from 21 to 25, and the inquest or queist composed of persons numbering from 12 to 21. Whether the inquest was a different body from the dousan, or was composed of members of the dousan or of private inhabitants called upon sometimes to advise with the bailies on special occasions, or on others to act as a jury and determine special questions of fact, is not by any means clear. Both conjectures seem to derive support from various acts. Probably the records of other burghs may afford more definite information on this subject. Meanwhile we can only call attention to the fact that the dousan and the inquest both appear to have possessed considerable authority as regards the guardianship of the burgh, the regulation of prices, and matters of police. The constant interference of the inquest with traders and merchandise, forms a prominent feature in the records, and gives an impressive idea of that mischievous meddlesomeness with the free current of trade and the prices of labour which once prevailed in Scottish burghs.

From innumerable entries, we learn that fines for underselling, and for a variety of petty offences, formed a prolific source of burghal revenue. When the town wanted a clock, or required means for building a steeple, or repairing a bridge, or any other useful purpose, instead of levying a tax, the plan of contriving and imposing fines was resorted to. A town clock being wanted, it was 'statut and ordanyt,' in 1462 (p. 147), that whoever breaks the price of bread or ale, shall be fined 'xij d. to the bying of a knok.' There are some other curious entries of this kind under same date. Some offenders did not get off with a fine. Flyting or scolding women were dealt with severely. In 1471 (p. 167) it was ordered that 'quhat women at flytis, fechtis, or sklandaris gud menys wyffis dochteris,' are to be led to the four gates of the town with two stones hanging in an iron chain from their shoulder—a species of perambulating pillory. The extracts offered on these and other points in social economy, during a period extending over centuries, painfully enlighten us on three things,—the extraordinary degree of arbitrary power which was exercised by the burgh authorities, the prodigious ignorance and narrow-mindedness concerning the principles of commercial, and it may be said public, well-being, and the wretched state of manners and morals prevalent in what are fancifully spoken of as the 'good old times.'

DELIVERANCE made by the Inquest appointed under Breve by the King regarding the Moss of Waltamshope. Peebles 15th October 1262.

APUD PEBBLYS die Sancti Leonardi anni gratie millesimi ducentesimi sexagesimi secundi, Archebaldus de Hopkelioc, Alexander de Wynkistun, Ricardus Fermarius, Clemens de Hopkelioc, Rogerus le Kedistun, Michael de Kedistun, Rogerus Ortolanus, Archebaldus de Hundwaluchishope, Adam de Stobhou, Thomas Faber, Ricardus filius Godardi, Gauri Pluchan, Willelmus Pastor, Walterus Pastor, Johannes Modi, Robertus Gladhoc, Cokinus Faber, Adam Hacsmall, Jurati dixerunt quod burgenses de Pebblys foderunt petas suas in petaria de Waltamshope, et quod Robertus Croke dictas petas violavit secuit et fregit et petas ducere inpedivit, et quod unum equum cepit cum brueria, et precium equi quod est quatuor solidi et precium bruerie quod est unus denarius, detinet adhuc tanquam suam escaetam, dicens quod est sua escaeta, eo quod dictam brueriam in communa sua eradicarunt: dicti autem burgenses precium dicti equi et bruerie cum servientibus domini Regis et baroniis pecierunt ad vadium et ad plegium quod non potuerunt habere quia dixit quod sit sua escaeta. Dicti autem jurati dixerunt quod dictus

AT PEBBLYS on the day of Saint Leonard in the year of grace one thousand two hundred and sixty two, Archibald de Hopkelioc, Alexander de Wynkistun, Richard Farmer, Clement of Hopkelioc, Roger Keddistun, Michael of Kedistun, Roger Gardiner, Archibald of Hundwaluchishope, Adam of Stobhou, Thomas Smith, Richard the son of Goddard, Gauri Pluchan, William Shepherd, Walter Shepherd, John Modi, Robert Gladhoc, Cokin Smith, Adam Hacsmall, being sworn said that the burgesses of Pebblys dug their peats in the moss of Waltamshope, and that Robert Croke spoiled cut up and broke the said peats and prevented them from being led, and that he seized a horse with heath, and still detains the price of the horse which is four shillings, and the price of the heath, which is a penny, as his escheat, saying that it is his escheat because the said heath was plucked in his common. The said burgesses likewise asked from the servants of our lord the king and the barons the price of the said horse and heath in pledge, which they could not receive because he said that it was his escheat. The said jurors likewise said that the said

Robertus Cruke edificavit aulam suam ubi homines domini Regis solebant communare. Idem Robertus aravit super communam de Peblis ut dicti jurati dixerunt.

Robert Cruke built his hall where the men of our Lord the King were wont to have their common. Also the said Robert ploughed upon the common of Peblis as the said jurors said.

NOTUM SIT omnibus Christi fidelibus presens scriptum visuris uel audituris quod nos, frater Bernardus, permissione diuina abbas de Aberbrothoc, et eiusdem loci conuentus, de expresso consensu tocius capituli nostri, damus, concedimus et presenti carta nostra confirmamus, Willelmo dicto Maceon burgensi de Peblis, et heredibus suis, totam terram nostram quam habemus in burgo de Peblis iacentem inter terram Johannis de Lacu ex parte australi, ex parte vna, et terram Johannis filii Willelmi ex parte boriali, ex parte altera, quam Laurencius de Wedayl de nobis tenuit, et quam idem Laurencius coram fidedignis per fustum et baculum nobis sursum reddidit, ac totum jus et clameum quod in dicta terra habuit, vel quoquo modo habere potuit, pro se et heredibus suis omnino resignauit in perpetuum. TENENDAM ET HABENDAM dicto Willelmo et heredibus suis in liberum bur-

BE IT KNOWN to all the faithful of Christ who may see or hear the present writing, that we brother Bernard, by divine permission abbot of Arbroath, and the convent of that place, with the express consent of our whole chapter, give grant and by our present charter confirm to William called Maceon, burgess of Peebles, and his heirs, our whole land which we have in the burgh of Peebles, lying between the land of John of Lake on the south, on the one part, and the land of John Williamson on the north, on the other part, which Laurence of Wedayl held of us, and which the said Laurence before honest men by staff and baton rendered up to us, and all right and claim which he had in the said land or might have in any manner, he for himself and his heirs for ever entirely resigned. TO HAVE AND TO HOLD, to the said William and his heirs in free burgage of us and our successors, with all gagium de nobis et successoribus nostris, cum omnibus commoditatibus asiamentis et iustis pertinenciis suis; salua nobis et successoribus nostris iusticia regalitatis et aliis placitis nostris in dicta terra cum voluerimus tenendis. REDDENDO inde nobis et successoribus nostris dictus Willelmus et heredes sui duos solidos argenti singulis annis ad festum Sancte Trinitatis, et inueniendo abbati de Aberbrothoc qui pro tempore fuerit et eius monachis conuersis et clericis, balliuis et actornatis eorundem, venientibus pro negociis et causis monasterii, quociens aduenerint, singulis secundum statum suum, cum familia sua, honestum hospicium, aulam in qua honeste comedere poterunt, cum mensa trestulis et aliis apparatibus, spensam cum butellario, cameram seu cameras ubi honeste recubare poterunt, coquinam honestam, et stabulum pro equis suis; inuenient eciam in aduentibus predictis personis sufficienter focale, tam in aula et in camera quam in coquina; albas candelas de sepo que vulgariter nuncupantur candele de Paris, lecterium stramentum in aula et camera, et sal pro mensis. Preterea cum nuncii vel cursores abbatis interuenerint ad hospitandum sine contradictione admittentur, ad sumptus tamen pro cibariis suis idem Willelmus et heredes sui non tenebuntur. Dictus eciam Willelmus seu heredes sui nullo modo terram et hostilagium predictum vendent impignorabunt seu alienabunt, vel ad firmam dimittent alicui persone, nisi de consensu predictorum abbatis et conuentus commodities easements and just pertinents; reserving to us and our successors the right of holding courts of regality and others our pleas on the said lands when we will. PAYING therefor to us and our successors, the said William and his heirs, two shillings of silver in each year at the feast of the holy Trinity, and finding honest lodging for the Abbot of Arbroath, who shall be for the time, and for his monks associates and clerks their bailies and attornies coming for the business and causes of the monastery, as often as they shall arrive, each according to his station, with their domestics, a hall in which they may becomingly eat, with a table trestles and other furniture, a spence with a buttery, a chamber or chambers where they may comfortably sleep, a decent kitchen and a stable for their horses; they shall provide also on the coming of the foresaid persons sufficient fuel as well in the hall and chamber as in the kitchen, white candles of tallow which are commonly called candles of Paris, straw or rushes for the hall and chamber, and salt for the tables. Moreover, when the messengers or runners of the abbot shall come to dwell there they shall be admitted without gainsaying, but the said William and his heirs shall not be liable for the cost of their food. Also the said William or his heirs shall in no manner sell impledge alienate or let to farm to any person the foresaid land and hostilage except with the Letters by King David II., charging the Community of Peebles to assign a stance in the common muir to build a chapel. Edinburgh, 8th March, 1362-3.

Dauid, Dei gracia Rex Scottorum: Balliuis burgi de Peblys burgensibusque et communitati burgi eiusdem, salutem. Sciatis quod concessimus dilecto ac fideli nostro [fratri] Johanni de Peblys, magistro hospitalis eiusdem, locum siue spacium competens in communi dicti burgi ad construendum et edificandum quandam capellam [in] honore gloriose Virginis Dei genitricis Marie. Quare vobis mandamus et precipimus quatinus locum spacii quadraginta octo pedum in longitudine et viginti quatuor pedum in latitudine, eidem Johanni infra dictam communem assignetis, vbi dicta capella competencius valeat edificari; et hoc sub pena que competitere [poterit] nullatenus omittatis. Datum sub sigillo nostro apud Edinburgh, octavo die Marcii, anno regni nostri tricesimo tercio.

David by the grace of God King of Scots: To the bailies of the burgh of Peblys, and to the burgesses and community of the same burgh, greeting. Know ye that we have granted to our beloved and faithful, brother John of Peblys, master of the hospital thereof, a fitting place or stance in the common ground of the said burgh for constructing and building a certain chapel in honour of the glorious Virgin Mary the mother of God. Wherefore we strictly charge and command you to assign to the said John within the said common land a place of the extent of forty-eight feet in breadth and twenty-four feet in length, where the said chapel can be fitly built; and this in nowise ye leave undone under all competent penalty. Given under our seal at Edinburgh the eighth day of March in the thirty-third year of our reign.

LETTERS by King James the Third, under his Great Seal, freeing the Burgesses, Inhabitants, and Community of the Burgh of Peebles from appearing in the courts of the King's Forest of Ettrick. Edinburgh, 5th August 1480.

JACOBUS Dei gracia Rex Scotorum: Omnibus probis hominibus suis ad quos presentes litere peruenerint, salutem. NOUERITIS quia nos considerantes et clare intelligentes quod burgus noster de Peblis in liberum burgum regni nostri, per nostros serenissimos predicessores Scotorum Reges, cum libertatibus et priuilegiis in libero burgagio fundatur et infeodatur, consimiliter ut ceteri burgi regni nostri cum priuilegiis burgalibus temporibus elapsis infeodantur; ex cuius burgi de Peblis conburgensium et communitatis lamentabili relacione concepimus et querela quod ipsi conburgenses et communitas ac inhabitatores eiusdem diuersis temporibus exactis et noviter arrestati attachiati et vocati per officiarios nostros Foreste nostre de Ettryk extiterant ad comparendum et respondendum in curia nostra bondarum dicte nostre Foreste, in lesionem et dampnificacionem veterum libertatum et preuilegiorum dicto burgo ex antiquo concessorum. Nos igitur pro singulari fauore quem gerimus erga dictos conburgenses inhabitatores et communitatem dicti burgi, ac perpendentes molestias et grauamina eisdem in dictis suis preuilegiis exhibita

JAMES, by the grace of God King of Scots: To all his good men to whom these letters shall come, greeting. KNOW ye that we considering and clearly understanding that our burgh of Peebles was founded and infeft into a free burgh of our kingdom by our most serene predecessors Kings of Scotland with liberties and privileges in free burgage in the same manner as the other burghs of our kingdom were infeft in times past with burghal privileges; from the mournful relation and complaint of the burgesses and community of which burgh of Peebles we have understood that the said co-burgesses, community and inhabitants of the same in divers times past and lately were arrested, attached and summoned by our officers of our Forest of Ettrick to compear and answer in our court of the bounds of our said Forest in loss and damage of the ancient liberties and privileges granted of old to the said burgh. We therefore, for the singular favour which we bear to the said co-burgesses inhabitants and community of the said burgh, and considering the troubles and injuries done and to be done in their said privileges, have exonered and by these presents exoner et illata, exoneraulmus et per presentes exoneramus, pro nobis et successoribus nostris, imperpetuum dictos conburgenses inhabitatores et communitatem dicti burgi nostri de Peblis et eorum successores dictum burgum inhabitaturos ab omnibus compariciónibus et responsionibus in dictis curiis bondarum prefate nostre Foreste de Ettryk temporibus quibuscunque pro futuris; et si contingat quod dicti conburgenses et communitas vel aliquis eorum transgrediantur seu transgrediatur in destructionem arborum veredum vel in capcione ceruorum bestiarum ferarum seu venacionalium de predicta nostra foresta, volumus et ordinamus pro nobis et successoribus nostris quod transgressores et delinquentes huiusmodi puniantur et corrigantur, et quod sua amerciamenta inde proveniencia et cadencia leuentur et capiantur per cognitionem et deliberacionem assise ut interest, in itinere nostro justiciarie de Peblis et in nulla alia curia extra libertatem dicti Burgi in futurum. Quare vniuersis et singulis balliuis cursoribus officiariis et ministris dicte nostre Foreste de Ettrik presentibus et futuris, ceterisque legiis et subditis nostris quorum interest vel interesse poterit, stricte precipimus et mandamus nequis eorum intromittat cum dictis conburgensibus et communitate in arresta attachiamento compulsione vel vocacione eorum aut successorum suorum dicti Burgi conburgensium ad comparendum vel respondendum quibuscunque futuris temporibus in curiis bondarum dicte Foreste nostre de Ettryk, sub omni pena quam for us and our successors for ever, the said co-burgesses inhabitants and community of our said burgh of Peblis and their successors who shall inhabit the said burgh, from all compearing and answering in the said courts of the bounds of our foresaid Forest of Ettryk in any future times whatsoever; and if it happens that the said co-burgesses and community transgress or any one of them transgresses in the destruction of the green wood, or in the capture of stags wild beasts or other beasts of chase of our foresaid forest, we will and ordain for us and our successors that such transgressors and offenders shall be punished and corrected and that the fines thence produced and derived shall be levied and imposed by the trial and verdict of an assize as effeirs in our justice air of Peblis and in no other court out of the liberty of the said burgh in future. Wherefore, to all and sundry the bailies, couriers, officers, and servants of our said Forest of Ettrik present and future, and our other lieges and subjects whom it can or may concern, we strictly charge and command that none of them interfere with the said co-burgesses and community in arresting, attaching, compelling, or summoning of them or their successors co-burgesses of the said Burgh to compear or answer in any future times whatsoever in the courts of the bounds of our said Forest of Ettryk under erga nostram regiam incurrere poterit maiestatem; quos balliuos cursores officiarios et ministros dicte nostre Foreste presentes et futuros, ex omnibus intromissionibus suis in vocacione arresta et attachiamento ipsorum conburgensium et communitatis et successorum suorum predictorum ad predictas curias bondarum Foreste nostre de Ettryk relaxamus et exoneramus pro perpetuo per presentes. Datum sub magno sigillo nostro apud Edinburgh quinto die mensis Augusti anno Domini millesimo quadringentesimo octuagesimo et regni nostri vicesimo primo.

all penalty that can be incurred to our royal majesty; which bailies couriers, officers, and servants of our said Forest present and future we discharge and exoner by these presents for ever from all calling, arresting, and attaching of the said coburgesses and community and their successors foresaid to the said courts of the bounds of our Forest of Ettryk. Given under our great seal at Edinburgh, on the fifth day of the month of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand four hundred and eighty, and in the twenty-first of our reign.

CHARTER of Confirmation and Novodamus by King James the Fourth, under his Great Seal, to the Burgesses and Community of the Burgh of Peebles of their privileges and possessions. Edinburgh, 24th July 1506.

JACOBUS, Dei gracia Rex Scotorum: Omnibus probis hominibus totius terre sue clericis et laicis, salutem. Sciatis quia quondam nobilissimus progenitor et auus noster bone memorie Jacobus secundus Scotorum Rex, cuius anime propicietur Deus, habens considerationem lamentabilis querele et proposicionis conburgensium et communitatis burgi sui de Peblis, qualiter antiquis retroactis temporibus per guerrarum discrimina et ignium incendia carte

JAMES, by the grace of God King of Scots: To all good men of his whole land, clergy and laity, greeting. Know ye that whereas our late most noble progenitor and grandfather of good memory James the Second King of Scots, on whose soul may God have mercy, having consideration of the lamentable complaint and proposition of the co-burgesses and community of his burgh of Peblis, likeas in euidencie et singule sue litere predecessoribus suis dicti burgi conburgensibus, super infeodacione et libertatibus eiusdem burgi date et concesse, distructe combuste et adnullate penitus extiterant, idcirco pro zelo et fauore quos ipse quondam auus noster dictis conburgensibus et communitati gerebat eis, concessit et pro se et successoribus suis ratificauit approbauit, et pro perpetuo confirmauit, dictis conburgensibus et communitati ac suis successoribus, totas et integras infeodaciones libertates priuilegia sasinas et possessiones eis et dicto burgo per antecessores suos aliquo tempore retroacto factas et concessas; Et nunc vero nos, ad perfectam nostram etatem existentes et consimiles consideraciones habentes sicut dictus quondam auus noster dictis conburgensibus et communitati habuit, et pro singulari fauore quem apud eos gerimus, dedimus et concessimus, et hac presenti carta nostra pro nobis et successoribus nostris pro perpetuo de nouo damus et concedimus, prefatis conburgensibus et communitati et suis successoribus, omnes libertates sasinas priuilegia et possessiones per ipsos et suos predecessores prius habitas et vsitatas; ac approbauimus ratificauimus et confirmauimus, et hac presenti carta nostra approbamus ratificamus et confirmamus, totas et integras infeodaciones sasinas possessiones et priuilegia dicto burgo aliquo tempore retroacto super huiusmodi infeodacionibus et libertatibus datas et concessas, cum potestate dictis conburgensibus et times long bypast by the hazard of war and fire their charters, evidents, and the several deeds given and granted by his predecessors to the co-burgesses of the said Burgh concerning the infeftments and liberties of the same having been entirely destroyed, burned, and annihilated, therefore for the zeal and favour which our said late grandfather bore to the said co-burgesses and community, he granted to them and for himself and his successors ratified, approved, and for ever confirmed to the said co-burgesses and community and their successors all and whole the infeftments, liberties, privileges, sasines and possessions made and granted to them and to the said burgh by his predecessors in any time past: And we now having arrived at our perfect age and having similar considerations as our said deceased grandfather had for the said co-burgesses and community, and for the singular favour which we bear to them, have given and granted and by this our present charter for us and our successors for ever of new give and grant to the foresaid co-burgesses and community and their successors all liberties, sasines, privileges, and possessions had and enjoyed by them and their predecessors of before; and we have approved, ratified, and confirmed, and by this our present charter approve, ratify, and confirm all and whole the infeftments, sasines, possessions, and privileges given and granted to the said burgh concerning the said infeftments and liberties in any time past, with power to the said co-

communitati ad habendas et tenendas curias cum creatione conburgensium suorumque conburgensium et inhabitantium dicti burgi replegiacionibus; vnacum firma burgali et paruis custumis, curiarum eschaetis et amerciamentis, officiariorum electionibus, transgressorum infra dictum burgum punitionibus sicut et ceteri nostri burgi habent; vnacum molendinis et signanter molendino nunc super latus montis castri nostri de Peblis constructo et edificato, cum locis siue aqueductibus molendinorum videlicet, le myldammys multuris et eorum sequelis et edificiis nunc super latus dicti castri montis constructis, quodquidem molendinum et que edificia nunc super latus dicti castri montis constructa sursum reddita fuerunt in generali inquisicione in itinere nostre justiciarie tenta apud dictum burgum de Peblis in mense Maii vltimo elapso per dilectum consanguineum Andream dominum Gray nostrum justiciarium generalem; aceciam cum aquis piscariis aucupacionibus venacionibus quantum antecessoribus nostris ante dicti burgi infeodacionem spectabat et pertinebat; cum montibus terris et vallibus et vsu eorundem ad communes terras suas de Cadmure Hommyldoune et Venlaw et le Commoun Struthir et ad vtendum et gaudendum eisdem per pasturacionem aracionem et seminacionem prout eis magis videbitur expediens et opportunum, et sicut ipsi et predecessores sui eisdem prius gaudebant et vtebantur, cum communi pastura libero introitu et exitu ad communem de Glencars a solis

ELECTION and Institution by the Community of Peebles of Sir John Ker to the altar of St Mary's Aisle in the parish church of Peebles. 5th and 6th August 1532.

IN Dei nomine Amen. Per hoc presens publicum instrumentum, cunctis pateat euidenter et sit notum quod anno incarnationis Dominice millesimo quingentesimo trigesimo secundo, mensis vero Augusti die quinto, indictione quinta, pontificatusque sanctissimi in Cristo patris ac domini nostri domini Clementis diuina prouidentia pape septimi anno nono: In mei notarii publici testiumque subscriptorum presentia personaliter constitutus honorabilis vir, Johannes Hog, extunc balliuus burgi de Peblis, in pretorio eiusdem pro tribunali sedens, vnacum communitate eiusdem ibidem congregata,

IN the name of God, Amen. Be it manifest and made known to all by this present public instrument that in the year of the incarnation of our Lord one thousand five hundred and thirty-two, the fifth day of the month of August, the fifth indiction, and the ninth year of the pontificate of the most holy father in Christ and our Lord, the lord Clement the Seventh, by divine providence pope: In presence of me, notary public, and witnesses underwritten, personally appeared an honourable man, John Hog, then bailie of the burgh of Peblis, sitting in judgment reliqui vero absentes, ad electionem infrascriptam legitime premoniti ad ydoneum capellanum eligendum ad ministrandum et deseruiendum in altari beate Marie Virginis, in insula Johannis Geddas infra ecclesiam parrochialem de Peblis fundata, in manibus suis, per decessum quondam domini Jacobi Dekysone vltimi possessoris eiusdem, de jure vacante; et ibidem prefatum per balliuum liberam per electionem dicte communitatis, nemine contradicente exceptis duobus, viz., Gilberto Dekysone et Adam Dekysone, discretus vir dominus Johannes Ker, capellanus, ad deseruiendum et ministrandum in dicto altari libere electus erat, non obstante intrusione domini Johannis Tuedy, capellani in eiusmodi altari, per suos consanguineos confecta, ex eo quod dictus dominus Johannes Tuedy non inuentus erat ydoneus in cantu per maiorem partem consilii dicti burgi de Peblis [et] decanum et choristas dicte ecclesie, et prefatus Dominus Johannes Ker inuentus erat ydoneus non solum lectura sed eciam cantu ad id seruitium exercendum per eandem maiore partem consilii dicti burgi [et] decanum et choristas eiusdem prefate ecclesie. QUIBUSQUIDEM peractis, sexto die eiusdem mensis Augusti dictus Johannes Hog, balliuis, nemine dicte communitatis contradicente excepto Willelmo Tuedy, ad dictum altare Johannis Geddes personaliter accessit, et ibidem prefatum dominum Johannem Ker in realem actualem et corporalem possessionem et institutionem dicti altaris, juriumque et pertinentiarum in the tolbooth thereof, together with the community thereof there assembled, the remainder being absent, lawfully summoned to the election underwritten, to elect a fit chaplain to minister and serve at the altar of St Mary the Virgin, founded in the aisle of John Geddes in the parish church of Peblis, lawfully vacant in their hands by the decease of Sir James Dekysone, last possessor thereof; and there, by the free election of the said community, none gainsaying except two, viz., Gilbert Dekysone and Adam Dekysone, a discreet man, Sir John Ker, chaplain, was freely elected to serve and minister at the said altar, notwithstanding the intrusion of Sir John Tuedy, chaplain, into the said altar, made by his cousins, because the said Sir John Tuedy was found unlearned in church song by the greater part of the council of the said burgh and the dean and choristers of the said church, and the foresaid Sir John Ker was found fit, not only in reading, but also in chant, by the said greater part of the council of the said burgh and the dean and choristers of the said church. WHICH things being so done, on the sixth day of the said month of August, the said John Hog, bailie, none of the said community contradicting except William Tuedy, personally went to the said altar of John Geddes, and there inducted, placed, and instituted the said Sir John Ker in the real, actual, and corporal possession and eiusdem, induxit imposuit et instituit, per ornamentorum calicis et librorum prescripti altaris tradicionem, in huiusmodi altaris possessionis signum, ut moris est et in talibus fieri consuetum; secundum tenorem fundationis desuper confecte. De et super quibus omnibus et singulis prefatus dominus Johannes Ker, a me notario publico subscripto sibi fieri atque tradi petiit vnum aut plura publicum seu publica, instrumentum seu instrumenta. Acta erant hec in pretorio predicto hora vndecima ante merediem prefati quinti diei, secundo ad dictum altare beate Marie Virginis prescripti diei sexti, hora nona ante merediem aut eacirca, sub anno mense diebus indictione et pontificatu quibus supra: Presentibus ibidem honorabilibus et discretis viris, Villelmo Peblis de Crukstoun, Johanne Hay, domino Thoma Sclaiter et domino Johanne Patersone capellanis, cumque plurimis aliis testibus ad premissa vocatis pariter et requisitis.

Et ego vero Johannes Hay, artium magister, clericus Glasguensis diocesis, [notarius etc.]

institution of the said altar and rights and pertinents thereof, by delivery of the ornaments, chalice, and books of the foresaid altar in sign of the possession thereof, as is accustomed to be done in like cases, according to the tenor of the foundation made thereupon. Upon all and sundry which the foresaid Sir John Ker asked me notary public subscribing to make and deliver to him one or more public instrument or instruments. These things were done in the foresaid town hall, at the eleventh hour before noon of the foresaid fifth day, and thereafter at the foresaid altar of St. Mary the Virgin on the foresaid sixth day, at the ninth hour before noon or thereabouts: There being present honourable and discreet men, William Peblis of Crukstoun, John Hay, Sir Thomas Sclaiter, and Sir Johne Patersone, chaplains, and with many other witnesses likewise called and required to the premises.

And I, John Hay, master of arts, clerk of the diocese of Glasgow, notary, etc.

27 September 1686.

This day the proveist produced a letter from the Privy Counsill discharging

[1] Numerous cases of the like nature occur in the court book at this period. In some instances the charge of non-attendance is met by the plea of sickness or other necessary cause of absence, and a promise to 'keep the kirk in time comeing;' and in others the parties are found 'orderly and absolved.' The main object of enforced attendance in the parish kirk appears to have been the prevention of 'conventicles' and other non-conformist gatherings.

[2] Along with the records and charters recently discovered, there was found a silver arm-plate, on which the Burgh arms were engraved. That this plate is the 'badge' referred to in the text there seems no reason to doubt, from the material and apparent age of the plate, and also from the fact of there having been attached to it a card, on which were written the words 'Town carrier,' adhibited probably when that office gave place to a more modern institution, and the badge was laid aside.
